The Committee Makes Innumerable Anonymous Complaints Without Much Success
-A Reporter's Experiences in Hunting for the Dog-Some Good Advice for the Future Guidance of the Committee.

To the Editor of The World:

It seems that we cannot get any nuisance absted in New York without the aid of the press. We therefore appeal to you to call the attention of the authorities to the hewling of a very large dog in West Twenty-second street. We have complained to the Captain of the precinct, the Superintendent of Police, Police Commissioners, the Mayor, and lastly to the Board of Health without effect. We are a committee of the residents of the block bounded by Sixth and Seventh avenues, and this dog annoys the entire square. Please advise us. Respectfully,

THE WORLD is ever ready to put its shoulder to the wheel and shove along any public measure which it conceives to be for the advancement of public interests, and it has done its best in this case.

A reporter went up into the neighborhood where insomnia was destroying the people, and many valuable pieces of personal property were being wasted as missiles. He began his work with the firm determination to reason quietly with the owner of the offending large dog and convince him that it was his duty to reduce the animal to sausage meat. He considered this an easy matter, as there was so much of argument.

The dog was said to be a large one, and of course this meant a larger revenue to be gained from him as sausage meat to begin with, and then his hide might be made up into a supply of shoes or kid gloves for the whole family for a year. His teeth could be utilized for scarf-pins and watch-charms, and his head would probably be just the thing as an ornament for the next season's bonnet of the mistress of the manse, if the prevailing fashion continued to enlarge its scope for a few months longer.

There are only about eighty houses in Twenty-first and Twenty-second streets, the affected region, and the scribe rang the first bell enthusiastically.

Oh, yes; they had a dog. But right in the midst of the reporter's argument the lady of the house interrupted him with "You hateful old thing! Our Prince never howled nor disturbed anybody." She would join a committee if she had a chance. And just then an aged, blind and very adipose terrier groped its way into the room.

Of course that ended the argument, and the philanthropical newspaper man withdrew after having obtained the information that there were twenty dogs of high and low degree in the block, and that most of them howled.

At the next house an elderly spinster said spitefully: "No. I haven't any dog. I hate The dog was said to be a large one, and of howled.

At the next house an elderly spinster said spitefully: "No, I haven't any dog. I hate dogs. I like cats best."

A twitching of the third-door bell brought a big man in his shirt sleeves to the door, and he remarked, politely, but with more emphasis than seemed at all necessary, that it was none of the reporter's business whether he kept a dog or not.

phasis than seemed at all necessary, that it was none of the reporter's business whether he kept a dog or not.

No. 4 had no dog but would like one, and finally confessed the possession of a spaniel when he learned that the visitor was not a tax assessor. He had been disturbed by the whining of a red setter dog in the back yard of one of the Twenty-first street houses. He had not made any complaint and did not belong to "the committee." He had tried firing a bit of tenderloin with strychnine in it over the back fence, but found no relief.

No. 5 had two pugs, three cats and a parrot. People had said mean things about the unchristian-like conversation of the parrot, but nobody could say aught against the pugs, although the cats sometimes received bouquets sand bootjacks in response to their octets with same wicked felines in the neighborhood. They had not heard of any committee, but knew that there was a beastly mongrel pug somewhere on the block which yelped every night, and if they could locate him they would give him a button.

No. 6 had had a sweet little yellow dog which they got in the country last summer, but those nasty dog-catchers had snatched it away from their nearthstone a month ago, and the thirty days' mourning still remained in memorium of the departed ki-yi. They liked dogs, and the murmur of a coach-dog in the yard of the house opposite—in Twenty-first street—lulled them to sleep each night.

the yard of the house opposite—in Twenty-first street—lulled them to sleep each night. They would not have anything to do with an abating committee.

abating committee.

No. 7 was not at home, but the servant girl said that she had been kept awake by a din in the next house, but thought it was a man just learning to play on the violin.

No. 8 had not heard of "the committee" but

No. 8 had not heard of "the committee," but said that there was a crank in No. 11 who objected to the practice of a preacher in the next house of rehearsing his sermons, because he could not hear himself play on the accordion. He had no fault to find except that Mrs. Smith's "vous fault to find except that Mrs. Smith's "vous fault to find except that next house of rehearsing his sermons, because be could not hear himself play on the accordion. He had no fault to find except that Mra. Smith's "young uns," in the house back of his, had a racket going on all the time, and the 'eldest Miss Smith banged away on her piano so much at night that he really could never hear a dog if he howled like thunder.

The scribe's muscle was giving out, but he tried one more house. It was the home of John Chamberlin. Mr. Chamberlin, a fine-looking old gentleman, was just emerging. He said that there was a very large dog next door—a St. Bernard. It was the property of Anson D. F. Randolph, the fine old silvergray publisher of Twenty-third street. It sometimes howled for an instant, but was hardly a nuisance. Mr. Randolph had lived there for six years, and Mr. Chamberlin and his family had lost no sleep.

Mr. Randolph was next called upon. He smiled pleasantly when the scribe told his errand and said: "Yes, yes! That is an old story." Then he added, eagerly: "Do you know the complainant?"

A negative shake of the head in response to this query had a depressing effect on Mr. Randolph. "After a moment he said: "About ten months ago a sergeant from the Nineteenth Precinct came to our house to investigate a complaint made by a man who did not leave his name. Two weeks later a man from Police Headquarters looked up the reputation of my dog in the block. He said that the complainant had left no name. A little after him came a man from the Board of Health to satisfy himself of the truth of an anonymous complaint. Then Mayor Hewitt received an anonymous complaint. Then Mayor Hewitt received an anonymous complaint. Then Mayor Hewitt received an anonymous complaint. Then Sayor Hewitt received an anonymous complaint. Then Gord of Health to satisfy himself of the truth of an anonymous complaint. Then Gord of Health to satisfy himself of the cruth of an anonymous complaint. Then Gord Hewitt received an anonymous complaints.

"Each time we satisfied the officers that the dog was no nuisance at Capt. Reilly looked into our case once, but knew nothing about the complainant.

"Each time we satisfied the officers that the dog was no nuisance, at least. I engaged Detective Kersenger to ascertain the identity of the complainant, but he was unable to do so unless it was an advertising agent who lives some distance from me in Twenty-first street, and who found fault with the dogs of the block generally.

"Last summer my son was out of town, the dog accompanying him. On the day of his return in the fall an anonynous complaint against our dog was received by me, and I received one each day for six weeks.

"The dog is what is known as a Louville or Pyrenees species of St. Bernard. He is a home dog, a pet. He sleeps in the hall outside my son's chamber, and is never out of the house more than fifteen minutes at a short howl—say thirty seconds long—when hungry, and that occurs perhaps eight times a week."

The investigation stopped here. The World is prepared to "advise" "the committee" as follows:

First—Remove the crank.
Second—Oil the temper of the anonymous complainant.

Third—Serew up courage enough, if you have real grievance and not a dyspecticle.

have a real grievance and not a dyspeptic's stemach, to make complaint where it will mean business—at Jefferson Market Police

Fourth—But before doing so, closely scru-timize yourself and make sure that you are not a greater nuisance with your anonymous communications and "complaints" than all the score of four-footed curs in the square.

ENLENSTEIN'S QUEER STORY.

He understood that he was receiving a sec-ond cabin ticket on a Red Star steamer, and paid for such. When he reached the docks he was directed to a vessel lying at the pier of the Netherlands line, which is next to that of the Red Star. He boarded the steamer, and was sent to the steamer.

He then discovered that he was on a freight steamer and that his quarters were vile. He asked to be allowed to land, but was detained on board until the vessel sailed. The result of his treatment on board, he said, was his commitment to a hospital in Berlin as soon as he arrived in that city.

He showed the chief a discharge from the hospital, giving the date of his admission as Feb. 18, 1896, and that of his departure as Aug. 8, 1897.

He further said that he returned to America as soon as possible. He is now anxious to obtain redress for his sufferings.

He told his story to a Woald reporter with considerable difficulty, as he speaks no English and is very deaf. He said that the vessel on which he sailed was the Rotterdam and that he landed at Rotterdam. The steamer named is the finest passenger vessel of the line and has been in use but one year. Before that it was the British Empire.

Enlenstein could not have sailed in it, and no freight steamer of the same name has ever been known to touch at the pier of the company.

Charles Spitzer, the ticket agent, says that the man paid $20 for a steerage ticket and that he knows nothing of what followed.

He says: "I banged him in the jaw and nearly broke it. Then I battered his head against the mop-board and finally kicked him outdours. He landed all in a heap and I did not know but I should be obliged to send for an ambulance, but he finally walked away without saying a word."

LETTERS FROM THE WORKERS.

Complaints and Suggestions from the Readers of the Evening Edition of "The World." To the Editor of The World :

My husband has been out of work some months and does not seem to be able to obtain a situation. Won't some of the readers of your evening edition, which is always friendly to poor and deserving, let me know where work can be obtained?

Shop Women Who Dare Not Sit Down.

During the holiday time the girls in the store on Fourteenth street, in which I work, have been compelled to work from 8 in the morning until 10 and 12 o'clock at night, standing all the time. There is a law to compel employers to provide seats, but it is never enforced. It means "discharged" for any girl to be caught sitting down. What are we to do?

The Domestic's Side of It.

To the Editor of The World I see the generous attention your evening edition gives to the affairs of the workers in this great city. But little seems to be said by anybody about the hardships and triais of domestics. There's Gail Hamilton, she's always urging the factory girls to get places as domestics and paints a very pretty picture of the delights of drudging in somebody else's home circle. Now I've been "working out" in this way for three or four years and know just what it is from experience. There are some places where a domestic gets decent treatment. But there are a great many more where she is overworked, underpaid and abused. Sometimes she is insulted. Many a poor girl could tell a tale that twould make a sensation for some of the so-called best families. And many, very many domestics domestics. There's Gail Hamilton, she's families. And many, very many domestics work hard from daylight way into the night, and so on, day after day, with never a word of thanks or encouragement. There's a long story, Mr. Editor, of the domestics' side of the case, and about all most of the newspapers ever print is a lot of "chestnuts" about the way the girls are supposed to order the mistress about! I am glad that your evening paper is giving the other side of the case a fair show.

Hard to Get Wages Due.

The way that some of the mistresses neglect to pay their help is just disgraceful. Going on six months I've been working at my preson six months I've been working at my present place, and five months' wages are due me. The lady's husband is a clerk at City Hall and gets $2,500 a year. Yet he says I'll have to wait for my $2.50 a week. Something or other always comes up so I can't get my money. At election time it was some kind of assessment that made him short. Lately it's been Christmas presents. What can a poor girl do?

Injustice to a Salesgirl.

I am working in a little notion store on Fourteenth street. My employer promised me liberal pay—$6 a week—that seems big to me. But he don't give me hardly anything. He sits in a back office, smokes high priced cigars and drinks beer all day, and when I ask him for my money he puts me off from day to day. He owes me for three weeks now. It costs so much to go to law that I ion't know which way to turn. S. A. R.

Harsh Rules Enforced.

To the Editor of The World:

Now that the rush of the holiday season is over, why can't the storekeepers give us overworked girls a little consideration? They night at least let us sit down at the counters might at least let us sit down at the counters, But no! the moment a tired girl drops into a chair the eagle eve of the floor-walker is upon her. If she doesn't get up at once, she's reprimanded. And if she doesn't get up then, why she's at once reported, and stands a good chance of being discharged. There ought to be a little more of the milk of human kindness about the managers of these big stores.

Are the Times Presperous?

To the Editor of The World:
With 100,000 men and women in this city wanting work and unable to get it, it seems sarcasm for the papers to be continually congratulating everybody on the prosperous times. This raid by Supt. Murray in Capt. Reilley's precinct has revived the question of a general transfer of police captains. Capt. Reilley wants to be transferred from the Nineteenth, but a deadlock in the Board, in, fluenced, it is said, by the clamor of politicians, prevents it and destroys discipline in the force.

Maurice J. Power is reported to be the chief agent in retaining Capt. Reilley in the Nineteenth.
